Journey Back to Oz

August marks a celebration for fans of The Wizard of Oz—the 86th anniversary of the beloved film’s release on August 25, 1939. In addition, the 125th birthday of the classic book, first published in May 1900, was celebrated earlier this year. Whether you first met Dorothy and Toto on the page or the silver screen, their journey down the Yellow Brick Road continues to charm audiences of all ages.

L. Frank Baum’s The Wonderful Wizard of Oz was a sensation from the start, quickly becoming a staple in American children’s literature. Over the decades, the story has inspired sequels, stage plays, and, most famously, the 1939 MGM film starring Judy Garland as Dorothy. The film dazzled audiences with its Technicolor magic, memorable songs, and a cast of unforgettable characters: Scarecrow, Tin Man, Cowardly Lion, and, of course, Toto (who was played by a female Cairn terrier named Terry).

The book and the movie differ in small ways—Dorothy’s slippers are silver in the book but ruby red in the film, for example—but both deliver the same heartwarming message about friendship, courage, and finding your way home. The story’s appeal has lasted in part because it offers both adventure and comfort. As author Ray Bradbury once said, “Oz is what we would hope and like to be,” a place where villains aren’t so villainous and hope always wins out.

The Wizard himself is a memorable figure, too. When his secret is revealed, he admits, “I’m really a very good man, but I am a very bad wizard,” reminding us all that sometimes, good intentions matter more than magical powers.

So this August, why not revisit Oz? Dust off the book, queue up the movie, or share the story with a grandchild or other young friend. After all, as Dorothy reminds us, “There’s no place like home”—and for many, Oz will always feel a little like home, too.

Jack Lloyd was born August 1st in Minneapolis, MN. He graduated from the University of Minnesota with a bachelor’s degree (and a master’s) in mechanical engineering in thermal sciences. Afterwards, he went to work for Proctor & Gamble in Cincinnati for about a year and a half, before he decided to go back for his PhD as well. Jack was also the first person from the U.S. to earn an honorary degree from the Russian Academy of Sciences.

While working as a graduate student, Jack did a great deal of research on satellite re-entry, focusing on how to keep re-entry parachutes from burning up on re-entering the atmosphere. This became a basis for satellite re-entry technology as we know it today.

Jack married his wife, Mary Jane, in December of 1963. He and his wife built a cabin on Lake Michigan, which their family still owns today. They have two children (Stephanie, who lives locally, and Jay, in Juneau, Alaska), five grandchildren, and one great-grandchild! About three years ago Jack and his wife moved to our community cottages, and he moved to Zimmerman Place in February of 2025. Mary Jane lives part-time at Carmel Valley Manor in California.

In his spare time Jack greatly enjoyed fishing, and spending time in nature. You may see Jack around playing BINGO, attending trivia, or listening to our live music. When you see Jack around be sure to say, “Hello!”, you will be glad you did!
